

COVID-19 update: A message from Shacter, Cohen & Bor

Dear all,

As we continue to keep a close eye on the coronavirus (COVID-19) developments and its growing impact, we want to assure you of the important steps that Shacter, Cohen & Bor are taking to ensure the safety of our clients and our team members, whilst also ensuring that during these unique circumstances, we can continue to deliver the personalised service you are accustomed to receiving from the firm.

The UK is now in the delay phase, and to support this national effort, and to protect our clients and our people, we are following all the advice provided by Public Health England and the government. In our offices, we have measures in place to help ensure the working environment is safe and require that our people and guests confirm that they do not pose a risk to others when conducting business.

Should the need arise, we have already brought online, and are ready to deploy the advanced infrastructure, processes and safeguards to allow our professionals and support teams to function fully remotely. Within our client service areas, our teams have implemented plans to ensure that our clients continue to be served without disruption.

Helping our clients navigate their business challenges this situation presents is also a priority. Our partners and professional staff are available to you, and we are happy to help think through the implications for your business. We are committed to working through these challenging times together.
